Matters from the Public
There were no matters from the public.

One Map Update by Jessica Hersh-Ballering
Ms. Hersh-Ballering provided an overview of how the Bicycle/Pedestrian Coordination Committee is creating and sharing a map of all the pedestrian and bike trails in the Charlottesville area. This map will be shared with the public online. This map will combine the County, City, and University maps into one map of all the Ped/Bike trails for the region.

Comments:
- Will the public be able to comment on the online map, so an accumulation of comments can be reviewed for future plans?
- This could be a way to keep the discussion on Ped/Bike trails going
- The map will be an PDF and not interactive, but why not make it a Wiki map so people can go online and make comments at any time; make it a public facing interactive tool;
Off-site Meeting Planning Discussion
There have been discussions among CTAC about creating opportunities to move meetings off-site to improve public participation/awareness/engagement. Ms. Hersh-Ballering began the discussion by outlining an overview of the process the committee can take to develop a public engagement plan. The committee hopes to have actionable items put in effect by January. This meeting will focus on developing the purpose and content of the outreach effort.

What is the purpose of the outreach?
- Advertising campaign to get people to come to the meetings
- Provide other ways (besides the meeting) for the public to voice their opinions
- Educate people about the Long Range Transportation Plan

Ideas proposed by the committee members:
- Use graduate students to work on transportation projects, this will engage future transportation planners and help bring awareness to the community
- Albemarle County has Citizen Advisory Committees (CACs), all projects that go to the planning board have to go through a CACs; we could use the CAC meetings to reach out to representatives from the county, city and state (Note: this does not cover the City, perhaps, we could reach out to the Neighborhood associations? Also, not all the CACs are in the MPO area.)
- It is important to engage the transit users and have an equitable input process that engages the public earlier in the planning process; the public is disconnected
- How can we get people engaged with the planning process before the plans are already flushed out?
- Don’t want to duplicate the efforts of other groups and public outreach from other plans
- Stay focused on the Long-Range Plan; we could focus on the public engagement process(?)

  - Long Range Plan
    - CAC (annual summit)

Go to the CACs with the Long Range Plan and ask them what sections they would like to learn more about, then have presentations at subsequent CAC meetings on those requests.

What is it that you want to communicate?
How to engage the lower income community? Transit users?

Smart C’ville - Civic Innovation Day next week – engage for technological outreach; innovation engages a diverse audience

Gather Info
What information do you want from the public?

- How can we improve our engagement process for the Long Range Plan?
- Does the MPO have an ongoing public comment button? Can we have one on the CTAC page?
- Form based code is being seriously considered in the City and County would be a topic to draw in a large audience (will this engage a diverse audience)

Staff will propose ideas for presentation and venue opportunities to the committee via email; draft agenda

The Wedzel Property presentation on 9/26, 6pm at the County Office Building would be a good meeting to provide an example of public engagement.

Ms. Donna Chen has a great presentation on the future of transportation that could bring a large public audience. If we hold the event after January, we might be able to have a virtual bike (?) simulator.

It would be good to join another large meeting, like at the TomTom festival or the CAC Summit?

Staff Reports
Mr. Boyles provided a brief update on the Hydraulic Rd project. The City Council and Board of Supervisors agreed to recommend to the MPO Policy Board to apply for Smart Scale funding for the proposed project for a two-lane bridge with enhanced bike/ped amenities. There are developments planned for both sides of the bridge that would match the short range plan. There are some concerns about the need to “take” some existing businesses to make room for the project. There are also concerns that the bridge will not score high enough in the Smart Scale process. This is a very expensive project: $36 million. There is a balance of $18 million that can only be used in the Hydraulic Road area – the city and county would each offer $9 million – however, the letters of intent should have been submitted in June and it is unclear if the project will have access to that funding. The next opportunity to submit a letter of intent is in two years. It is yet to be determined which projects the MPO will submit for Smart Scale funding. The Hydraulic Road project could take as little as one or as many as all four project submissions.

B. Recommended amendments shall be submitted to the MPO Policy Board for adoption.
The committee began by brainstorming the many different projects, plans, and processes they could inform the public about.

Projects:
- Hydraulic Road and Route 29
- One Map (bicycle and pedestrian infrastructure map that includes info from City of Charlottesville, Albemarle County, and UVA)

Plans:
- The Jefferson Area Bicycle and Pedestrian Plan

Processes:
- Smart Scale funding process
- The Long Range Plan planning process

The committee also briefly discussed projects for which they could gather information, focusing almost entirely on gathering info about previously underrepresented groups during the long range planning process and gathering information about transit from both users and non-users of our local transit systems. Committee members also mentioned that information-gathering should be ongoing through online and app-based reporting options.

Intended audience: The committee specifically identified young (aged 20-30 years old?) Charlottesville and Albemarle county residents as a demographic that is underrepresented at planning-related meetings and discussed the importance of outreach topics that appeal to this demographic. Individual members of the committee also mentioned other underrepresented groups, including individuals with disabilities, parents, people of color, and lower-income individuals.

Intended venue for outreach and other comments: Committee members generally agreed that CTAC should not duplicate – but complement – other outreach efforts. Similarly, outreach could take place at other events (CAC annual summit, the Tom Tom festival, etc.) or at other places people already gather (transit stops, etc.) rather than creating a separate event.

Additionally, outreach should feel and be purposeful – it should not be done after a plan is already in or near its final stages (when it cannot be changed).

Recommended plan:
The majority of the committee seemed to focus on outreach that shares info and gathers info on the Long Range Transportation Plan. Please review the two options below and respond to me with your thoughts and suggestions. We will discuss in greater detail at our November meeting.
The ideas below are pulled from a FHWA webinar series on public outreach. Click here to watch and/or read more about the series.

Option 1 – Pop-up outreach with tablet survey collection: We recommend that the committee identify upcoming events whose intended audiences include individuals from the demographics identified as not frequently attending planning meetings – especially young adults. An example of an event might include a free music event at IX Park or during a transportation-themed family program at the Discovery Museum on the downtown mall.

The committee should draft a brief survey that helps the committee better understand respondents’ knowledge of the long range planning process, previous involvement in any public engagement process for any planning project, and likelihood of participating in a variety of different outreach activities for the next long range planning process (likely to be approved in 2024, but outreach will take place in the couple of years beforehand).

The committee could consider developing a “lure” that creates a “captive audience” when tabling at an event. For example, a DOT in Minnesota covered a van in a special wrap that could be drawn on, then erased and drawn on again (like a dry-erase board). Children loved it and would draw on it for an extended period of time at events. Parents became a “captive audience” and DOT staff were able to get numerous completed surveys.

Subsequent CTAC meetings will review and refine the outreach locations and survey questions.

Option 2 – Meeting-in-a-box pilot project: We recommend that the committee develop and pilot a “meeting-in-a-box” outreach program. (Watch this short video from the FHWA that explains how other meeting-in-a-box programs have worked.)

Committee members should develop questions/prompts to be included in the meeting-in-a-box; these questions/prompts will allow participants to give answers that help the committee better understand respondents’ knowledge of the long range planning process, previous involvement in any public engagement process for any planning project, and likelihood of participating in a variety of different outreach activities for the next long range planning process (likely to be approved in 2024).

Committee members will then pilot the meeting-in-a-box program. Committee members may work in teams or independently to host an informal meeting with friends or a target demographic that they are connected to in some way.

Committee members will submit meeting notes and responses to Jessica. Subsequent CTAC meetings will review and refine the meeting-in-a-box format and questions/prompts with the intention of using the meeting-in-a-box for outreach and data collection during the next long range planning process.
